Answer :

∟; Yes, the agreement between the centre, state government and the GNLF involves the functioning of a federal structure as it allows autonomy in governance at the state and provincial level.

∟; Yes, it involves the functioning of federalism because flood relief is undertaken by the states while being funded by the centre.

∟; No, it does not involve the functioning of federalism because this appointment reflects a centralised authority.

∟; No, it does not reflect a federal structure as a centralised university comes under the control of the central government.

Our Federal India

The powers of the central and state government should be separated where the states enjoy their autonomy and the central government has the advantage of having more power than that of the state government.

Agriculture, employment, infrastructure and public health should come into concurrent list.

Water distribution should come into Union List.

Residuary power of the Union legislature should be expanded and be flexible according to the need. The union legislature has to legally explain its decision and steps on exercising such power so that discrimination between states cannot take place.

The states should be formed on the basis of administrative convenience and geographical continuity.

The sources of revenue collection and the control of the resources should be in the hand of the central government. However, the states should be free to set up enterprises that attract investment locally.

The central government has to take initiative to resolve interstate disputes in a time bound manner and the order of the Supreme Court would be final in this regard. Incitement of regional bias during inter-state disputes should be made a cognizable offence.

The governor should be appointed by the central government in consultation with the state government. This would prevent the misuse of the office of the governor. The candidate for the post of the Governor should not be from political background. The conditions for the imposition of President's rule should be made very strict to prevent the abuse of this provision. State governments should have the right to challenge their dismissal in Supreme Court.

Q5 :

Which of the following should be the basis for formation of a State? Why?

- a. Common Language
- b. Common economic interests
- c. Common religion
- d. Administrative convenience

Answer :

d. Administrative convenience

The administrative convenience should be the basis of formation of state as it helps in the better administration and welfare of the citizens or people of that area. This would automatically lead to economic development and the development of a common economy. It is not advisable to form a state on the basis of language, economic interests and common religion because people belonging to similar economic and religious groups are often scattered in a territory. Therefore, it is difficult to assemble and administer them. Language was previously the basis of formation of many states. However, as has been found in the case of Andhra Pradesh and Telangana, it is clear that even language is not a sufficient basis to ensure regional stability. This will lead to further conflicts. The aim of the state is to administer its territory well and to look after its people and that can only be possible if the states are formed on the basis of administrative convenience.

Q6 :

Majority of people from the States of north India-Rajasthan, Madhya Pradesh, Uttar Pradesh, Bihar - speak Hindi. If all these States are combined to form one State, would it be in tune with the idea of federalism? Give arguments.

Answer :

No.

The unification of four large states with sizeable populations would not be in tune with the idea of federalism. This is because there are many regional variations in the local issues that affect people in these states. Addressing these issues requires a separate political and administrative set up for each of them. From an administrative point of view, the creation of one very large state with a huge population would lead to imbalances in the distribution of resources across the territory. This would lead to unequal development and conflicts between various regions with the failure to fulfil the aspirations of all people.

Q7 :

List four features of the Indian Constitution that give greater power to the central government than the State government.

Answer :

The four features of the Indian Constitution that give greater power to the central government than the State government are as follows: (Any four)

- Power becomes lawfully centralised during emergency.
- Items that generate revenue are under the control of the central government.
- Planning Commission that controls and supervise the resources management of the states is appointed by the central government.
- The central government can delay the state legislation and can also examine the bills passed by the state legislature and completely veto them.
- Articles 33 and 34 have strengthened the powers of the central government by authorising the parliament to protect persons in service of the union.
- The state governments cannot take disciplinary action nor can remove any administrative officer appointed by the central government.
- Article 356 provides central government with the power to dismiss state government and impose President's rule.

Q8 :

Why are many States unhappy about the role of the Governor?

Answer :

Many states are unhappy about the role of the governor because the governor is appointed by the central government. Therefore, there is a possibility of the governor's office being used to control and remove the state government. The governor is not elected but appointed by the central government and can be a retired military officer, civil servant or politician. The governor can suspend the elected state government and can also dissolve the legislative assembly. The governor also has the power to reserve a bill passed by the state government for the assent of the President.

Q9 :

President's rule can be imposed in a State if the government is not being run according to the provisions of the Constitution. State whether any of the following conditions are a fit case for imposition of President's rule in the State. Give reasons.

Q9: Two members of the State legislative assembly belonging to the main opposition party have been killed by criminals and the opposition is demanding dismissal of the State government.

Q10: Kidnapping of young children for ransom is on rise. The number of crimes against women are increasing.

Q13: More than 2000 people have been killed in the communal riots.

Q14: In the water dispute between the two States, one State government refused to follow the decision of the Supreme Court.

Answer :

Q9: No. Killing of two members of the State legislative assembly belonging to the main opposition party by the criminals is not the basis for removal of the state government as it is a law and order problem.

Q10: No. Rise in kidnapping of young children for ransom and the number of crimes against women is a law and order problem but does not represent a breakdown of the Constitution.

Q11: No. President's rule cannot be imposed in a state without giving the largest political party or alliance a chance to prove their majority on the floor of legislative assembly.

Q12: No. Ruling of two opponent and different political parties at the State and at the centre is not a criterion for implementing President's rule.

Q13: Yes. If the state is inefficient to control the riots then President's Rule needs to be implemented as it represents a complete failure of the administration.

Q14: Yes. If one state has refused to follow the decision of Supreme Court then it is a case of breakdown of constitutional order and fit for imposition of President's rule.

Q10 :

What are the demands raised by States in their quest for greater autonomy?

Answer :

There are four demands raised by States in their quest for greater autonomy that are as follows:

- Demand for separation of state and central power: Tamil Nadu, West Bengal and Punjab have demanded that more important powers should be assigned to the states.
- Financial autonomy: Some states have demanded for independent sources of revenue and greater control over resources.
- Administrative autonomy: States have demanded that the centre should not have control over the administrative machinery of the state.
- Cultural and Linguistic: Some states have demanded for autonomy on the basis of language and culture.

Q11 :

Should some states be governed by special provisions?

Does this create resentment among other States? Does this help in forging greater unity among the regions of the country?

Answer :

It is essential that some states should be governed by the special provisions on the basis of historical, cultural and social circumstances and administrative requirements. The north-eastern states, Jammu & Kashmir, the hilly state of Himachal Pradesh and some other states like Andhra Pradesh, Goa, Gujarat, Maharashtra and Sikkim are governed by special provisions. The special provisions are made according to the special requirements. For example, the north-eastern states of India have a unique history and tribal culture that needs to be protected.

This has created resentment among other states as there is a fear that these provisions would lead to separation in those areas. Many people oppose these provisions because they believe that there should be equal division of powers in federal state.

No, this does not forge greater unity among the regions of the country as it leads to a feeling of bias.
